

Contacting candidates

During an election campaign local candidates are keen to get out and about as much as possible. They are always looking for new opportunities to meet voters and to raise their profile in the local community. This gives you a chance to get them to visit your organisation, perhaps as a media opportunity or just as a way of them getting to know your services and find out more information on homelessness generally.

Finding out who your local candidates are is easy, just contact the political party HQs. Just get their contact details and invite them to visit your organisation. Make sure that you invite all the candidates. This doesn't have to be at the same time - in fact, unless there is a specific event that you are inviting them along to the candidates would probably prefer to have their own separate meetings.
